It originated in the latter half of the nineteenth century. The Mormon people trace their origins to Joseph Smith, Jr., in early 19th Century New York. Smith's movements in Europe — Great Britain and then the United States — are beyond the scope of this column. Smith was declared an idiot, and his followers were told he was a con man. They began to gather in the United States in the early 1840s and spread out in the western states. Mormons are more or less a collection of fundamentalist protestants that believe in polygamy and the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. They believe in advanced health care and health insurance. They believe in self-control and work ethic. And you can bet that no alcoholic drink will ever enter the tabernacle. (Less power to them.) The difference between Mormons and other protestants is that theirs is a worldwide movement, and their leaders claim to speak for God on behalf of their followers. And they do. It's very well-documented on the Internet. The "Mormon Church," "Mormonism" or "Mormon" people are just generally referred to as "Mormons." The other big difference is that Mormons are a no-holds-barred bunch. Women play a very, very important role in the Mormon religion. The Church permits polygamy for male members, but not for women. Because of the church's teachings, Mormon men would be denied access to the priesthood in traditional church practice, and the women in the church would have to live in a female-only world. The church also claims the father of a child is the one who marries a woman and impregnates her. So, father, son, and the woman should all be married. The church permits, but does not endorse, female marriage to men who have been sealed to deceased or future wives, as polygamy is still illegal in many states. The male wives are to be treated like "wives" and some early saints were monogamous and treated "wives" like "wives." Some were even allowed to change their "husbands" names. 3e33713323
